A Message from the E-Board

March is Women’s History Month. It is only fitting that as an educational institution, we acknowledge women including Mary Wollstonecraft, Frances Wright and Margaret Fuller as pioneers that pushed for women’s access to educational opportunities equal to men. Did you know that Catherine Brewer is the first woman to receive a bachelor’s degree in 1840? If you are interested in how people are still pushing for educational access for women around the world today, take a look at the story that the Classified Book Club will be discussing on March 15th – Radical Inclusion is about the advocacy work accomplished in Sierra Leone that led to access to education for young girls. Join the discussion even if you haven’t read the book. All are welcome.
